

Sky High acquisition expands its skills set

Sky High Technology, part of Sky High Plc, has announced that it has acquired Halifax Computer Services (HCS), a company specialising in manual data processing. Mark Mattison said the acquisition was an opportunity to expand Sky High's operations into complementary data collection and analysis. 'We are an ambitious, forward-thinking organisation and the expansion is part of our strategic development plans for the future. There is an evident and strong skill set between the workforces.' Sky High, which employs over 50 members of staff, was created in 1990 and now has a global presence throughout the UK and Australia.
